The past year has seen much progress in the preparation of the museum building. The caretaker's apartment has been completed and is now occupied by Clarence and Joyce Larson, who will be in charge. The outside work on the building has been practically completed. James McNeely donated the labor and furnished the rock to fill in the windows along the east wall improving the general appearance and making the inside space more usable. Alva Goodrich, B. A. (Dutch) Stover and Sam Johnson have volunteered to take care of the finishing of the inside of these windows. Many firms and individuals have contributed materials and labor. Our thanks goes to these interested parties: The Miller Lumber Company, Backstrom Builders Center, Copeland Lumber Co., Garrigus Cashway Lumber, Bend Aggregate & Paving, Farwest Steel, Bend Redimix, Deschutes Redimix, Grimes Pumice, Harry O'Grady, K. C. Bennett, Clarence Boyd, Ole Grubb, Fred Shepard, Ivan McGilvray, Jackie and Debbie Steele.

1970 Queen Selected

The Queen Selection Committee has announced that the Queen for 1970 has been chosen, but that her identity will not be revealed until the dinner meeting. During the meeting she will be duly enthroned.

There is a persistent rumor that a Pioneer of the Year will be brought forward to receive that honor. Let's see if it's just a rumor.

This picture was taken in 1910 on Oregon Avenue between Wall and Bond Streets. The occasion was the arrival of a turbine and large gear wheel for the first electric power plant at Bend. The team, owned by Jack Kelley and Ralph Dunn, made the haul from Shaniko. Ralph Dunn is the fellow on the wagon; and Armond Shearer on the horse. Claude Kelley, who loaned the picture, says the spot the wagon was on is now the site of the U.S. National Bank.

Two University of Oregon athletes, William Kenneth Bartlett, of Estacada, and Arthur Tuck, of Redmond, have been selected as members of the United States track team to compete in the Olympic games at Antwerp, Belgium. They were named following the Olympic tryouts held last Saturday in the Harvard stadium at Boston in which they competed against athletes from every section of the country. Bartlett placed second in the discus in the national tryouts, and first in the junior amateur athletic association championship held the day before, establishing a new junior record in the west.

Art Tuck, youthful phenom, who has been at the University of Oregon only one year, was chosen largely on his past record in the javelin.

EDITOR'S NOTE

Our thanks to those who have contributed articles and photos for this issue of the Gazette. Any story or picture of the old days in Deschutes is most welcome. We know many of the old pioneers have some interesting tales to be told.

IN TRIBUTE TO 1969 QUEEN, GRACIE EVANS GRIMES, WHO PASSED AWAY IN APRIL, 196

MY MOTHER

A little old lady whose hair had turned grey
Her step sometimes faltered and thoughts oft would stray
She was gentle and kind with friends by the score,
Always doing her share and many times more.

Her hope was of Heaven, a home up on high,
She departed this world with never a sigh.
God, grant that some day I may have attained
Those lovable ways that through living she gained.

FORGOTTEN PIONEERS TO BE RECOGNIZED

Oregon Geographic Names Board members have decided that two virtually forgotten pioneers should be remembered and their exploits called to the attention of the public.

The early-day explorers nearly bypassed by history are Andrew Wiley and John Settle. Wiley, on a hunting trip over the Cascades from the Lebanon area to the present site of Sisters, is credited with the discovery in 1859 of the Santiam Pass, now a major highway route. "Uncle Jackie" Settle was a pioneer of the Lebanon district who was an organizer and director of the Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain Military Road.

One day in 1866 Settle went hunting from a base camp high in the Cascades, walked east and discovered the body of water now known as Suttle Lake.

Geographic Names Board members recognize that Wiley Pass would have been a better name than Santiam — but fate did not decree this. In early days, Suttle Lake was known as Settle Lake, and still bore that name when damming of the lake was proposed at the star World War I to provide water for irrigation district.

But in the meantime, something went wrong, and the name honoring the pioneer who discovered the lake has been corrupted to Suttle Lake.

To honor the pioneers, Andrew Wiley and Jackie Settle, the state board has proposed the erection of a wayside sign on the Santiam Highway near Suttle Lake. This will be done by the highway department's sign division.

Original plans were to erect this sign on the road leading up from the lake, but sufficient shoulder space is lacking. It is now planned to place the sign near the approach to the Suttle Lake Resort.

Still very much alive is the effort to change the names of the Three Sisters to Faith, Hope and Charity. Leading the renewed effort is Federal Judge John F. Kilkenny, Portland.

The new effort to give the trio of peaks individual names, instead of "South," "Middle," and "North," has been the subject of a number of talks before Central Oregon groups in recent months. This past year, the state board on geographic names tabled the subject, but with Judge Kilkenny's backing, the name-changing move is expected to receive much attention throughout 1970.

Some obstacles to the move are already appearing on the geographic names horizon. The form "Three Sisters" has been used in many maps, guide booklets and Forest Service documents. The three mountains are central features of the Three Sisters Wilderness Area.

Most interesting argument against the name change is the contention that the Three Sisters are central features of a great family of mountains that include the Husband, the Wife and the Little Brother. Off to the east is another member of the family of mountains, Bachelor, known to old timers as Brother Jonathan. Skiers now call this peak "Mt. Bachelor," but in the entire Three Sisters wilderness lands there are no peaks called mountains. On maps, the peak appears as Bachelor "butte," but as a member of the closely knit great family of mountains it should be "Bachelor," old timers contend. No given names, such as Faith or Charity, are used.

Jagged Broken Top, slashed by great glaciers of the Ice Age, is a sort of outcast in the family of mountains. Pioneers said: "Broken Top was just a bit too close to the Sisters and lost his volcanic head in a flirtation."

Under the leadership of Edna Brinson and Edith Hollinshead a group of women members of the Pioneers Association conducted a rummage sale in the museum building over a period of several months. Active in this effort were the following members: Lilly Burton, Epsie Cox, Velda Bushnell, Carol Boyd, C. Kundinger, Agnes Grubb, Ruth B., Hazel Freeman, Gertrude McFadden, Genevieve Boyd and Dorothy McCauley. They were also assisted by Ole Grubb and Bill Burton who performed many of the heavier tasks in this activity. Many hundreds of articles were collected, cleaned, repaired and displayed for sale. As a result a total of $1531.57 was turned over to the Museum Fund.

OREGON EXCHANGES

HOW NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE TRIUMPHED OVER WEATHER MAN'S WORST

By HENRY N. FOWLER, News Editor BEND BULLETIN

[The story of a real newspaper achievement is here told by Mr. Fowler. It takes more than the weather to subdue western newspaper genius and enterprise.—Ed.]

Completely cut off from the outside world as far as ordinary means of communication were concerned for more than a week, the slightest scrap of wire news to be looked forward to as something to be hoped for, but certainly not to be counted on — this was the situation in which the Bend Bulletin found itself during the recent record storm which held the northwest country in its grip during the latter part of November and early December. How the snow blockade was set at naught through the intensive development of the local field and through makeshift means of communication, is a story perhaps unique in the newspaper annals of Oregon.

Bend's first realization that an epoch-making storm was breaking, came in the form of queries received by correspondents for Portland papers on November 19, asking for stories on storm conditions. The correspondents filed their replies, chiefly to the effect that there was no storm, for Bend was enjoying almost ideal spring weather. The replies were filed, but never sent, for lines were already down along the Columbia. The next morning no mail had been delivered, and telephone and telegraph offices reported that communication beyond Madras was impossible, while railroad officials gave out the information that the last Oregon Trunk train to leave Portland was virtually buried in snow at Frieda in the Deschutes canyon.

Right then the value of local news was realized as it had never been realized before. Efforts of railroaders to free the stalled train and to rescue its snowbound passengers constituted, of course, the big story, but there were other phases of the situation of almost equal interest. Central Oregon was covered by telephone for reports on weather conditions, establishing the fact that while the storm was general, this section of Oregon, at least, was experiencing a prolonged rain ordinarily considered typical of the Willamette valley. A survey of food supplies was made, and an estimate as to how long Bend could go on full rations was prepared. Conditions were compared with those prevailing 15 years ago when Bend was snowbound for a full month.

Lists of travelers kept in Bend by the storm were compiled, and other lists of Bend people who were undoubtedly being prevented from returning from outside points was published. What would happen to the dressed turkeys which could not be shipped for Portland's Thanksgiving dinner, and how long the sawmills could continue to operate with the supply of empty cars available, were questions asked and answered.

OUTSIDE CONNECTION SOUGHT

The charge has been made, probably with justice, that a news reporter is prone to lose his appreciation of the importance of occurrences with which he becomes too familiar, and that as a result news becomes apparently harder to get, and actually does lose some of its "kick." If any member of the Bulletin staff was nearing this mental attitude, the storm was a Godsend, necessity giving a very definite stimulus.

But at the same time every effort was being made to get in touch with the outside world. President Harding's arms conference was just beginning, the Arbuttle case was on, and there was a positive hunger for wire news.

For two days the Bulletin was without such service. The main lines were of course out of the question, and efforts were made to reach Portland or Spokane by Prineville and Mitchell, only to be met with the information that ultimate connection with any news center was impossible. Forest service lines to Sisters were tried in the hope that a relay to Eugene by way of McKenzie Bridge might be effected. The line across the pass was out of order. The Bulletin's grapevine circuit got into commission. A rancher in Millican valley, 20 miles east of town, was called on the phone. He called the Fort Rock ranger station, the Fort Rock ranger rang Silver Lake, Silver Lake called Lake View, Lake View wired Klamath Falls, and Klamath Falls wired United Press Manager Frank A. Clarvoe in Portland.

Then the news began to trickle in. Relayed five times, over wires never before used by a news agency, abbreviated United Press reports reached Bend between 9 o'clock and midnight, to be used the next day. The manner in which the news was obtained was almost as big a story as the actual happenings which were being reported.

It was too good to last. One of the rural lines developed an infirmity, and Bulletin news no longer traveled the length of the state and half way back. By that time, however, a wireless outfit had been assembled and the first radio news ever received in Central Oregon came when warnings from Marshfield and North Bend, telling of the probable loss of the tug Sea Eagle, were picked out of the air. Again the means by which the news was secured rivalled in importance the real occurrence.

One night the radio station allowed Bend to "listen in." Then the railroad wires were put into commission, and a partial service was made possible. Not until December 20 was the Western Union wire again available.

Train service up the Deschutes canyon was suspended for nineteen days, and for half of that period no mail was received. Then it was brought in from Shanico, which for the time being resumed its old time position as Central Oregon's chief shipping point. Not until the blockade was nearly at an end was any other than first-class mail and daily papers brought in, and shipments of stock were naturally out of the question. In spite of this handicap, however, the job department of the Bulletin continued to operate as usual, postponement of delivery being made necessary only in a few instances where special stock ordinarily not carried, had been specified.
